Today I gave the commencement address at #CUA. I am a proud alumnus, having left there 30 years ago. And just finished paying my tuition.

Dear CUA Magazine Staff:
As an NCSSS, CUA Ph.D. graduate, Class of 1970, and a retired U.S. Army social work officer, I want to extend my sincere praise and appreciation for the very warm and outstanding article “NCSSS Graduate Had a ‘Servant’s Heart’” (Spring 2012 edition). Lt. Col. Cabrera’s death was a great loss not only to his wife and his four children but also to the U.S. Army Social Work Program.

“Hats off” to NCSSS and CUA staff and personnel for caring and reaching out to both veterans and active duty military personnel and giving them the educational care and services they deserve. I am so proud to be able to say that I am a graduate and alumnus of NCSSS and CUA!

— Donald A. Myles, Ph.D.
Colonel (Ret.), Medical Service Corps
U.S. Army Social Work Officer

“Every year I seem to earn a living, which always amazes me, and I’m having a wonderful time. Sometimes I would say to myself, ‘Who am I? What am I? Why didn’t I take the white-collar job and make more money?’ but now, I know exactly why I did this: because I’m thrilled and much more in control of what I’m doing. Every day is full of emotion and exciting.”
— Richard Reiter, M.M. 1970, in NorthJersey.com article, “Cedar Grove Musician with Illustrious Career ‘didn’t plan any of this.’” (April 29)

“We live in the era of ‘social networking.’ If you want to get to know someone, you can Google them, become their Facebook friend, follow them on Twitter, invite them to LinkedIn, put them in your Google circle, Gchat them, text them, and if you are feeling really bold, give them a call on your cell. Let me add one more to your list, and I think it’s the best option of the bunch: Invite them out for coffee.”
— Catholic University President John Garvey in his commencement address at Archbishop Carroll High School. (May 24)

“I’d never seen The Crucible before tonight. Kudos to Catholic University of America for a fine show.
